1. Introduction	1
2. Diagnostic issues	2
2.1 Relevance of diagnostic issues for epidemiological research	6
2.2 ICD-10 classification of schizophrenia	7
2.3 DSM-III-R and DSM-IV classifications of schizophrenia	10
2.4 Similarities and dissimilarities between ICD-10, DSM-III-R and DSM-IV	11
2.5 Assessment methods	13
2.6 Case-finding methods	15
3. Epidemiology of schizophrenia	17
3.1 Incidence studies	17
3.1.1 The NIMH Epidemiologic Catchment Area study	19
3.1.2 The WHO Study on the Determinants of the Outcome of Severe Mental Disorders	30
3.1.3 Incidence in developing countries	32
3.1.4 Pockets of high incidence	33
3.1.5 Differences in age of onset for males and females	34
3.2 Prevalence studies	36
3.2.1 Community studies	36
3.2.2 Prevalence in developing countries	42
3.2.3 Pockets of high and low prevalence	43
3.2.4 The Epidemiologic Catchment Area study	44
3.2.5 Family and twin studies	45
3.2.6 Season of birth	47
3.2.7 Prevalence in different socioeconomic groups	53
3.2.8 Other risk factors	57
3.3 Epidemiological studies in primary health care facilities	60
3.4 Epidemiological studies in psychiatric facilities	62

3.5 Epidemiological studies in other facilities or among special population groups	63
3.5.1 Prisoners	63
3.5.2 The homeless	64
3.6 Epidemiological research and the etiology of schizophrenia	64
3.6.1 Implications of neuroanatomical and neurophysiological research	64
3.6.2 Studies of high-risk groups	67
4. Temporal trends	68
4.1 Was schizophrenia rare before the eighteenth century?	68
4.2 Is the incidence of schizophrenia on the decline?	70
4.3 Changes in the clinical picture of schizophrenia	74
5. Conclusions and recommendations for future studies	76
5.1 Methodological issues	76
5.2 High-risk studies	76
5.3 Geographical stability of incidence	77
5.4 Temporal changes in incidence	77
5.5 Sex differences	78
5.6 Social class and urbanization	78
5.7 Immigrant status	78
5.8 Co-occurring illnesses	79
5.9 Categorical versus continuous models	79
5.10 Social and biological risk factors	80
